Fornovalasco is a tiny village located in the Apuan Alps best known for the Grotta del Vento (Cave of Winds). On our way to Lucca we visit here after stopping to see the nearby “Devil’s” Roman Bridge, an amazing example of Roman engineering in the 1200s. The area is rich with white marble, and the town is surrounded by chestnut forests. The cave tour is replete with stalctites, stalagmites and little lakes, all dug out by the force of the weather and water over thousands of years.
